

Day 3 of Al Muna Drama Week

Today is the third day of our Al Muna Drama Week! The children have been taking part in different activities during the week and today there will be something new to explore.

These children are practising their music until it becomes good enough to meet their high standards. They use many instruments such as xylophones and rain shakers for the older children and maracas for the younger children. They had to have perfect timing and make it nice and clear for the play.

This is the ICT room and these children are making autobiographies about Hans Andersen. In this they have to use their researching skills and their own knowledge to bring it to perfection. They also share their information among themselves so that the job gets done quicker. This helps them to work better in teams.

These children are working hard to prepare the backdrop. They each have a section of the painting they have to complete so that it's quicker and has each person's style included. Children have been working on this painting since day 1 and it is almost finished. They have to use small brushes so it stays inside lines.

I think the children had a fantastic time. Tomorrow we will have a rehearsal of the whole play before the actual play. But don't worry because tomorrow there will be more activities before the two week break.
